Termites, both lower and higher ones, harbor methanogenic Archaea in their hindguts (7, 13).The H<sub>2</sub> consumption of methanogens is expected to promote anaerobic cellulose decomposition in the termite hindgut. Methanogenic symbionts of termites are present in two different niches: endosymbiotic methanogens are present in flagellates, and nonendosymbiotic ones adhere to hindgut surfaces (6, 7).
